Abstract : India has large productive and young population as her asset and the young generation is the power house of developing India. In India nearly 40% of our population comprises of youth and thus represents a vibrant and strong resource of our country.

The achievements, limitations and problems of Youth can be examined in terms of educational attainment, employment opportunities and changing behavioural patterns and value system of youth. Another aspect which requires adequate attention is the growing contribution of youths building the infrastructure of Rising India.

While drawing the map of the Rising India we cannot ignore the contribution of youth during the ancient and medieval Indian phase. The youth of ancient and medieval world of India played an exceptional role in contributing to the knowledge of our present day applications of science, culture, values, and traditions.

Today, the burden is on the youth of contemporary India to carry on the legacy of glorious Indian past and give their contribution to build up the "Rising India".

Introduction :

Once Swami Vivekananda remarked, "My hope for the future lies in the youth." India being the largest democracy in the world is also the youngest of all the nations. So, it is the duty of young Indians to stand on the podium and lead the nation.

But, the way isn't embedded with roses rather is weathered with the problems of corruption, unemployment, inadequate educational facilities, malfunctioned governmental authorities, etc.
